

'Let's Face It' Suspended

Kaye Ill

Although Garry Davis, son of the orchestra leader Meyer Davis, proved to be a capable pinch hitter (according to the Vinton Freedley office) for the ailing Danny Kaye at both performances on Sunday, the engagement of "Let's Face It" has been halted until Thursday night. Consequently, there will be no performances today and tomorrow. The show does not give Monday performances.

Kaye, the star of the musical, is under treatment for an infected throat. He went on Saturday night against the advice of his doctor, and has been under medical care since. From the time the show opened young Davis has been standing by as the star's understudy, in addition to filling a role. On Sunday he was permitted to do the "Melody in Four F" number.
